Nothing can be more proper than that old people should write books for young folks, and that young folks should read them ;for old people have the greatest amount of experience, and young people have the greatest amount of time to profit by it. Considering myself now belonging to the first of this category, and with a good share of the experience referred to, I shall take infinite pleasure in presenting this second volume of Life amongst the Indians to the readers of my first volume, who now amount, as far as I am able to learn, to some thing approaching 60,000.
