This book contains an overview of how the ADA applies to colleges and universities in the admission and education of students with disabilities. It defines "reasonable accommodation" and what it means for the student, school, program, and clinic. Provides examples of auxiliary aids, academic adjustments, and reasonable accommodations for students. Explains how to coordinate efforts between the Occupational Therapy department and fieldwork site. Academic faculty and fieldwork educators will find this book a useful tool in clarifying the rights of students with disabilities.
