From Our House: A Memoir Lee Martin

"Beautifully written improvisations that make up American life," hailed Lorrie Moore upon the publication of Lee Martin's award-winning story collection The Least You Need to Know. Now, Martin's stirring memoir From Our House is also garnering acclaim for its candid and uncomplaining look at a painful but ultimately redemptive coming-of-age.

While Lee Martin was still a baby, his father--once a robust, generous man--lost both hands in a farming accident. Embittered and hardened by the accident, Roy Martin lost his sense of self-worth, his dignity, and more important his faith in God. Lee grew up to know his father only as a harsh, angry man. A sensitive, awkward child, who was unable to perform many of the tasks on the farm his father could no longer do, Lee felt like a constant disappointment. So began a lifelong struggle between father and son, two men as different as night and day.

"Lee Martin has written so clearly and so beautifully about fathers and sons: their complex rivalry and affection, their frightening potential for violence against one another, [and] underneath it all the painfully deep, strong current of real love."--Reeve Lindbergh, author of Under a Wing

"In his unsentimental yet compassionate depiction of his father . . . Lee Martin has created a portrait that lingers in the mind right along with the most enduring characters in literature."--Marly Swick, author of The Evening News
