Understanding God's Love and Life's Polarities Emmitt J Nelson

This book is a work aimed at those who are attracted to logical thinking as applied by a technical mind to the Bible, the Universe, Earth, Man and all that there is. Scriptures from the Bible and the views of other Christian believers are used to justify the positions of logic taken by the author. The purpose is to logically treat the subject of why God created this Planet Earth and us that live upon it, in an attempt to logically prove, if such can be done, that God created so that a full expression of His great love could be demonstrated. The author views God's primary and only over-riding mission during our lives on earth is that of our redemption. Further that God is infinitely loving and patient and is constantly tending to the spiritual needs in real time of each willing, God seeking individual on this planet. This is not something God does sometimes but not at others. He is as active in our lives as we will allow Him to be, and yes sometimes He may even intervene in our lives with unrequited love. It is true; God is many things to many peoples. Is everyone's view and understanding of God accurate? Obviously not; sometimes culture fixes our beliefs, other times it is family heritage that dictates personal views of God. If some of these are in error, in such situations I believe God looks at the long term. I believe God just waits until He sees a spark of interest in an individual; then He goes immediately to work on tending to that one's redemption. The questions posed by thinking individuals of why famine, why sickness, why evil are all discussed and answers are offered as one would approach those answers from a Bible based but logical perspective.
