Over the last two decades, managers have witnessed a substantial change in the history, in terms of advances in technology, innovation on substitute products and heightened competition due to globalization of markets. With the rapid changing number of 'world class' competitors across the globe, organizations needs to improve their internal and external processes rapidly in order to stay competitive. This is only possible when the organization enjoys an effective supplier relationship management (SRM) at their place. An effective SRM always starts with the strategic intention of the organization and focus from top management. This book is providing an insight to the SRM and strategic outsourcing from the perspective of Indian manufacturing industries as the contribution of Indian manufacturing sector towards Indian economy is substantial. The working experience and the subject interest of the authors are also one of the reasons why this book is created.
